This progress report is used to ensure that you satisfy the requirements for the major in history. It will also serve as your guide when you make your course selections. It is important that you and your adviser share the report and update it every semester, as it will help prevent the possibility of discovering just before graduation that you do not have the necessary courses. Use this form instead of the online audit provided on My.Barnard, which you should just ignore. The latter is confusing because the flexibility of the History major requirements is too challenging for non-humans.

REQUIREMENTS FOR THE HISTORY MAJOR

The History major consists of eleven courses: six in the area of concentration; the other five may be either within or without. Six of the eleven courses must be taken at Barnard or Columbia.

The eleven required courses should include:

1. Three introductory lecture courses (at least one 1000-level course; the two others may be 1000- or 2000-level courses. Note that Columbia global core courses are listed as 2000-level but count as a 1000-level courses);
2. Two seminars (3000- or 4000-level courses), one of which must be taken at Barnard or Columbia;
3. At least one course (lecture or seminar) that demonstrates your temporal breadth. This usually means one course that covers themes and topics related to the pre-modern period (generally taken to mean the period before the nineteenth century);
4. At least one course (lecture or seminar) that demonstrated a geographic range (unless your field of concentration already does so). If your concentration is geographically-based, this means a geographical area or region that is outside your field of study;
5. The two-semester senior research seminar (HIS BC 3391-3392), normally taken in sequence, beginning in the Fall and continuing into Spring of the senior year.

Majors may, with the approval of their advisers, include two non-history courses in their list of eleven if the subjects are closely related to their concentrations.
