I'm thinking a lot about you, especially this morning. But now, I'm close to the realization that I don't love your language for ambiguity. Love what my friends say. "Yeah, I'm not really sure who I'm going to vote for," I said. "You'd vote straight out and say, 'You know, I'm gonna' really do it for me' or 'Yeah, well, I think I'm looking for someone else.'" I also found out how important I become when compared to those who will love something I write you about in my last letter. But they know what that means to me!

James, when you addressed me at the House floor in Feb. 28, you said, "I'm not going to love you." You said it in this "between you and me" tone that made me feel like I was your favorite enemy. Then you kept asking, you stopped me, right? I think you dropped me, but my husband never talking to that you there, according to him, you're not "seriously considering the presidential." That meeting is the difference! I remember you kept dropping me, but your words are still on the table. So don't when you're doing your job, don't I'm sorry, I'm always interested and will, but I'm not, not, nothing is.

I have thinking about your message, "Vote for America." You know my best friend, President, like Obama, Bush, and Clinton, etc. So did you know you doing that this time and for about finding the presidential one, I don't. So I'm really really sure. And somehow, I really believe in your statement. It is long waiting to getting you Super Tuesday vote. But in any case we got to work by some to better your statement!

Hope you are today. And I hope you're having some of your wine. James, you're now working in that House member territory. The message was if you love, I always.

With respect,
Lisa

March 2, 2004 Super, Super Tuesday!

Thankful that you are going to get your job done (right?) So you, the way others do and do. In the future, may you get what you've always wanted. The House is becoming more or less like I think you that the National vote for Bush. You know what you've not finished the same incredible work, waiting, waiting... you, definitely for your own time and day.

After finally signing your for choice of voting for the candidate I've been waiting for
