Grant Opportunities & News You Can Use

Hello, faculty,

We are back with our June Grant Opportunities newsletter! I hope you're enjoying the summer.

As always, we have office hours coming up the first Friday of the month. Our office hours this month will be Friday, July 7th at 10 AM.
You can find us here:

Join Zoom Meeting https://columbiauniversity.zoom.us/j/98766935924?pwd=VEdsdGN1NFBsNTNJQ1hIVkFhdkxiZz09

Meeting ID: 987 6693 5924

Passcode: 493168

This month we have a Featured Funder column highlighting the grants to help you publish a book written for a broader public, as well as grants to fund the process of publishing a book open access. For Sage Advice, we are rerunning a 2019 column called, "No Country for Misplaced Commas: Cormac McCarthy's Writing Advice." For The History of American Philanthropy, we are looking at the surprisingly mixed reception to Andrew Carnegie's donations across the country to fund libraries.

We have news stories and brief thumbnails of opportunities coming due in August. And in the back, we have six months' worth of deadlines. (As always, check the website! Some of the later deadlines have not yet been released.) The final internal grant deadline for 2022-2023 was March 21st. We'll keep you posted when new ones come out next year.

That's it for us! Don't hesitate to reach out if you're in need of funding, someone to review your applications, help building a budget, advice on managing a grant, or just want to chat.

We're here to help!

PLEASE NOTE: Liane has officially become a mother—to Ian Carlson McFee on June 23, 2023! While she is on parental leave, IFSR will continue to publish the newsletter, but we know some columns cannot rise to her customary level of inquisitive sass, and so the History of American Philanthropy, for example, will be on hiatus. In the meantime, enjoy this, the last, edition captained by her before her leave.

Writing for a Broader Public

It's June. Hopefully your brain has started to recover from the semester and you're turning back to old and new projects with some feeling of optimism and pleasure. What better time of year to think about that book you've been dreaming of writing for a larger audience? That's why this month, rather than focus on a single funder, I am bringing you a collection of grants in support of open access publication and nonfiction written for a general public.

"The 2023 Whiting Creative Nonfiction Grant of $40,000 will be awarded to as many as ten writers in the process of completing a book-length work of deeply researched and imaginatively composed nonfiction for a general readership. It is intended for multiyear book projects requiring large amounts of deep and focused research, thinking, and writing at a crucial point mid-process, after significant work has been accomplished but when an extra infusion of support can make a difference in the ultimate shape and quality of the work. Whiting welcomes applications for works of history, cultural or political reportage, biography, memoir, science, philosophy, criticism, food or travel writing, graphic nonfiction, and personal essays, among other categories." Deadline: TBA. Previously April 25th. Funding: $40,000.

The Alfred P. Sloan Foundation supports "authors in the research and writing of a wide range of books aimed at public understanding of science and technology [...] Supported books tend to fall into the following categories: Books that elucidate important subjects where the science is confusing or controversial; Books that profile important figures in science and technology; Books relating science and technology to daily life; Books exploring the numerous connections between science, technology, and art; Books about the relationship between women and science and technology; Books about the culture and philosophy of science." Deadline: January 1, May 1, September 1 annually. Funding: Varies.

The Public Scholars Award at the National Endowment for the Humanities, "offers grants to individual authors for research, writing, travel, and other activities leading to the creation and publication of well-researched nonfiction books in the humanities written for the broad public. Writers with or without an academic affiliation may apply, and no advanced degree is required." Deadline: November 29, 2023. Funding: Up to $5k/month for 6-12 months.

The NEH also offers The Fellowships Open Book Program, which is "a limited competition designed to make outstanding humanities books digitally available to a wide audience. By taking advantage of low-cost e-book technology, the program will allow teachers, students, scholars, and the public to read humanities books that can be downloaded or redistributed for no charge." Deadline: July 14, 2023. Funding: $5,500.

The American Council of Learned Societies and Arcadia have teamed up to create the Open Access Book Awards, which "recognize and reward the authors and publishers of exceptional, innovative, and open humanities scholarship. In the initial competition, two open access monographs will receive dual awards. Authors will receive the $20,000 ACLS Open Access Book Prize. Publishers of the winning titles will receive the Arcadia Open Access Publishing Award in the amount of $30,000 to support forthcoming books that would not otherwise be published open access." Deadline: September 1, 2023. Funding: $20,000.

Sage Advice

No Country for Misplaced Commas, or Cormac McCarthy's Writing Advice

Note: This seemed a timely moment to rerun this article.

Have you ever wondered what Cormac McCarthy would make of your research articles? Neither have I, truthfully, but faculty and postdocs at the Sante Fe Institute have spent the last twenty years finding out. When he's not busy writing Pulitzer-winning novels, it turns out that Cormac McCarthy has a thriving side hustle editing scientific articles. Two of the scientists who have worked with him, theoretical biologist Van Savage and evolutionary biologist Pamela Yeh, co-wrote a delightful article titled, "Novelist Cormac McCarthy's Tips on How to Write a Great Science Paper" in the September issue of Nature: International Journal of Science.

So what does Cormac McCarthy have to say?

Predictably, a great deal of his advice is concerned with building a narrative, like the following points.

> "• Decide on your paper's theme and two or three points you want every reader to remember. This theme and these points form the single thread that runs through your piece. The words, sentences, paragraphs and sections are the needlework that holds it together. If something isn't needed to help the reader to understand the main theme, omit it.

> • Don't slow the reader down. Avoid footnotes because they break the flow of thoughts and send your eyes darting back and forth while your hands are turning pages or clicking on links. Try to avoid jargon, buzzwords or overly technical language. And don't use the same word repeatedly — it's boring.

> • And don't worry too much about readers who want to find a way to argue about every tangential point and list all possible qualifications for every statement. Just enjoy writing."

Other advice is more stylistic, like the following points.

> "• Use minimalism to achieve clarity. While you are writing, ask yourself: is it possible to preserve my original message without that punctuation mark, that word, that sentence, that paragraph or that section? Remove extra words or commas whenever you can.

> • Commas denote a pause in speaking. The phrase 'In contrast' at the start of a sentence needs a comma to emphasize that the sentence is distinguished from the previous one, not to distinguish the first two words of the sentence from the rest of the sentence. Speak the sentence aloud to find pauses."

Some of his advice is specific to the sciences and won't work in all fields.

> "• Avoid placing equations in the middle of sentences. Mathematics is not the same as English, and we shouldn't pretend it is. To separate equations from text, you can use line breaks, white space, supplementary sections, intuitive notation and clear explanations of how to translate from assumptions to equations and back to results."

The overall advice applies equally well to grants as articles, though. Think of your proposal as a story people should want to read. A good story doesn't need everything you have ever read or thought in it. It does need enough information to be compelling and easy for the reader to follow. (So think Guy de Maupassant, not Italo Calvino. No one at the NSF wants to read a postmodern proposal.)

If you're interested in the rest of McCarthy's advice, you can read the full article here.

The History of American Philanthropy

Last issue, we discussed Andrew Carnegie's Gospel of Wealth and his underlying philosophy of giving. That philosophy could be crudely summarized as "a-rising-tide-lifts-all-boats"; Carnegie thought it was better for society as a whole for huge degrees of inequality to exist, if it allowed the basic standard of living and education for everyone to improve. To justify that inequality, though, the wealthy had to give away their fortunes to causes that would allow the less privileged to better themselves. And just as importantly, they had to give away that money while still alive.

So what did he actually give his money to?

The short answer is lots of things. There was the Carnegie Corporation (more on that in a future issue), Carnegie Mellon University, and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in 1910 to "hasten the abolition of international war." But Carnegie was best known for founding libraries. From 1889, when he first started building libraries, and 1919, when he died, Carnegie gave away $41 million to construct 1,679 libraries across the country. The story goes that, as a young boy, Carnegie couldn't receive formal schooling because he had to work, and instead educated himself mostly by reading books lent out by a local philanthropist, Colonel James Anderson. Anderson's generosity was so formative that Carnegie decided to use a huge portion of his fortune to offer the same opportunities to others.

It's a nice story and even seems to be true, but the reception of his generosity was considerably more complicated in practice. Sometimes local towns couldn't afford the upkeep of a Carnegie library. In one article from 2014, a local historian from Wilmington, North Carolina named Jennifer Daugherty recounted the story of how Wilmington city officials initially declined a Carnegie library grant when offered it in 1901 because the city would be obligated to spend $2,500 per year in upkeep and services. At that point, a women's club, the North Carolina Sorosis, started lobbying the city to accept the funds, eventually convincing them to commit $1,200 per year.

In the South, in particular, many white officials feared that Carnegie libraries would be integrated public spaces and turned down the money altogether, rather than accept a space that allowed for racial mixing. It actually wasn't true that Carnegie insisted on integrated libraries. There are several examples of Carnegie funding libraries specifically for Black communities, including one branch in Houston, which was established in 1913 when local Black community members secured a grant from Carnegie after they were turned away from the existing, all-white Carnegie library. In an essay titled, "Autonomy and Accommodation: Houston's Colored Carnegie Library, 1907–1922," Cheryl Knott Malone recounts the story of how the community successfully lobbied the City of Houston to let the community create an all-Black Board of Trustees for the library, only to have the city disband the Board eight years later and absorb the previously autonomous library into its existing, segregated network of libraries. Other Black communities were more ambivalent about segregated libraries. Wayne A. Wiegend cites in Part of our lives: a people's history of the American public library one Black assistant librarian who observed that when the Louisville Public Library opened its Coloured Branch in 1905 that "there were some of our race seriously opposed to the project[…] The segregation idea was repulsive." Yet she also felt that it was impossible for an integrated library "to give us the service that one of our race can give in an atmosphere where welcome and freedom are predominant" (cited in Wiegend, 84-5).

Mostly, according to Wiegend, the issue was class. The working class citizens, who made their living under the Gilded Age robber barons sometimes simply didn't want the charity of the men who had so thoroughly won the game of capitalism. When voters rejected a Carnegie grant in one West Virginia town, one union representative noted with satisfaction that, "There will be one place on this great green earth where Andrew Carnegie can't get a monument with his money" (Wiegend, 95).

That's where I want to leave the story of American philanthropy, to be resumed in November.

NSF highlights availability of Earth observation data for NSF-funded researchers

Posted May 4, 2023 by Staff.

"Recent developments in satellite and sensor technology have led to unprecedented advances in the resolution, extent, and frequency of Earth observations. High spatial and temporal resolution capabilities now allow for the investigation of crucial research questions across several Earth system science education and research themes. Yet, many of these datasets have previously been unavailable for research purposes because they are generated by commercial providers.

NSF announces investment in research infrastructure to improve life-saving weather predictions and climate projections

Posted June 1, 2023

"The U.S. National Science Foundation announced $91.8 million in funding for a Mid-scale Research Infrastructure-2 award to the University Corporation for Atmospheric Research (UCAR) to create the Airborne Phased Array Radar. APAR will be a state-of-the-art radar that will be attached to the outside of an aircraft and flown over land and oceans to get remarkably close 3D views of what is going on deep inside clouds and severe storms. It will provide a generational leap in understanding the formation of rain, hail and snow, as well as severe convective systems and tropical cyclones. This will help researchers improve models used for weather prediction and climate projections." <<more>>

NIH All About Grants Podcast: What Researchers and Recipients Should Know about ClinicalTrials.gov

Posted June 16, 2023 by Staff.

"ClinicalTrials.gov is the world's largest repository of clinical trial information. The site allows the public to easily find and learn about the myriad of research studies in human participants. Users can determine which studies are recruiting, when they will be completed, and can even find trial results. But what should researchers and recipients be aware of regarding this system as it relates to reporting NIH grant-funded trials? Join us for this episode of the NIH All About Grants podcast to hear from Dr. Anna Fine, the Acting Director of ClinicalTrials.gov. She will discuss the site's purpose, some requirements for recipients (more on the reporting policy in a follow-up podcast), types of information to be submitted, the process for submitting information, relevant resources, and more." <<more>>

More Early Stage Investigators Supported in FY 2022

By Mike Lauer. Posted June 5, 2023

"Over the past two years, we supported 1,412 early stage investigators (ESIs) in fiscal year (FY) 2020 and 1,513 in FY 2021, which were both all-time highs. These ESIs were first-time Principal Investigators (PIs) designated on type 1 (new) R01-equivalent awards. Today, we are pleased to announce that even more ESIs were supported in FY 2022 as part of our continued Next Generation Researchers Initiative (NGRI) efforts." <<more>>

Safeguarding Integrity and Collaborations: Not "Either-Or" but "Both-And"

By Mike Lauer. Posted May 25, 2023

"Today Science published our letter "Safeguarding integrity and collaborations," which summarizes our perspectives on NIH efforts to address long-standing foreign interference threats, many stemming from foreign malign talent recruitment programs. We are grateful to Science for publishing our letter and for endorsing our efforts to "talk more openly"[...]

"The main points we make in our letter are:

- NIH began addressing foreign interference concerns in May 2016, long before the Department of Justice launched its entirely separate "China Initiative."
- We understand concerns about racial, ethnic, or political targeting. The disproportionate number of cases (which altogether account for < 1% of all NIH-funded principal investigators) linked to China likely stem from the extensive reach of Chinese talent recruitment programs, which explicitly target ethnic Chinese scientists.
- There should be no conflict between rigorous integrity oversight and international collaborations. This is a false dichotomy. As we write, "Proper collaborations do not entail stealth employment, duplicative funding, undisclosed financial conflicts of interest, or the repeated recitation of lies to institutional or government officials." These behaviors, which deny funding to scientists who act with integrity, have often occurred at the instigation of foreign talent recruitment programs." <<more>>

Update on Simplifying Review Criteria: Analysis of Comments from the Request for Information

By Mike Lauer. Posted May 12, 2023.

"As discussed in the blog, "Update on Simplifying Review Criteria: A Request for Information (RFI)," NIH issued an RFI—from December 8, 2022, through March 10, 2023—seeking feedback on its proposed plan to revise and simplify the framework for the first level of the peer review of research project grant (RPG) applications.

"NIH received more than 800 responses to the RFI: 780 from individuals, 30 from scientific societies, and 30 from academic institutions. The vast majority were supportive of the proposed changes, although a minority were in favor of Factor 3 (Investigator, Environment) being scored, and a smaller minority advocated for a blinded or partially blinded review process. Most of the respondents highlighted the need for strong training resources for reviewers, study sections chairs, and scientific review officers." <<more>>

House Republicans Want NOAA to be an Independent Agency

From Government Executive by Eric Katz. Posted June 9, 2023.

"House Republicans are pushing to make the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration an independent agency, proposing to remove it from the Commerce Department's umbrella and boost the role of science at the agency.

"The NOAA Organic Act, introduced on Friday by Rep. Frank Lucas, R-Okla., who chairs the House Science, Space and Technology Committee, would formalize the agency's statutory authorities while removing a layer of political oversight. The measure would enshrine NOAA's scientific advisory board into law, tasking it with developing research priorities and incorporating the agency's scientific integrity policy—which aims to protect career scientists from political interference—into all of its decision making processes." <<more>>

Biden wants new national lab to study impact of climate change on disadvantaged communities

From Science by Jeffrey Mervis. Posted June 7, 2023.

"President Joe Biden is asking Congress for $35 million to begin planning a new national laboratory to study the impact of climate change on poor communities. The proposal for the lab, which would join the 17 basic science, energy, and weapons labs run by the Department of Energy, is buried in the fiscal year 2024 budget for DOE that the president submitted this spring. DOE officials did not request the money, Science has learned, and the proposal has gone largely unnoticed by the research community."

Business Sector Increases Funding for Basic Research

From National Council for Science and Engineering Statistics.

"Expenditures on the performance of basic research funded by the business sector have increased dramatically over the past 2 decades. Based on the institutions that performed the work, funding from the business sector for basic research has increased from $10.4 billion in 2000 to an estimated $36.0 billion in 2021 in constant 2012 dollars. Although federal funding for basic research performance increased in real terms from $31.1 billion in 2000 to $40.6 billion in 2005, little has changed since. Subsequently, federally funded basic research performance has essentially remained near or below $40 billion. The longer-term trends in funding shares follow a similar pattern of decreased relative importance of the federal government as a funding source." <<more>>

GENERAL INTERESTS AND CROSS-DISCIPLINARY

National Science Foundation
Law & Science
Deadline: August 1, 2023
"The Law & Science Program considers proposals that address social scientific studies of law and law-like systems of rules, as well as studies of how science and technology are applied in legal contexts. The Program is inherently interdisciplinary and multi-methodological. Successful proposals describe research that advances scientific theory and understanding of the connections between human behavior and law, legal institutions, or legal processes; or the interactions of law and basic sciences, including biology, computer and information sciences, STEM education, engineering, geosciences, and math and physical sciences." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Science and Technology Studies
Deadline: August 3, 2023
"Science and Technology Studies (STS) is an interdisciplinary field that investigates the conceptual foundations, historical developments and social contexts of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM), including medical science. The STS program supports proposals across a broad spectrum of research that uses historical, philosophical and social scientific methods to investigate STEM theory and practice. STS research may be empirical or conceptual; specifically, it may focus on the intellectual, material or social facets of STEM including interdisciplinary studies of ethics, equity, governance and policy issues." <<link>>

Council of American Overseas Research Centers
Multi-Country Research Fellowship
Deadline: August 10, 2023
"The Multi-Country Research Fellowship enables US scholars to carry out trans-regional and comparative research in countries across the network of Overseas Research Centers as well as other countries. The fellowship supports advanced research in the humanities, social sciences, and allied natural sciences for US doctoral candidates, who are all but dissertation, and scholars who have earned their PhD. Applicants are eligible to apply as individuals or as teams. Scholars must carry out research in two or more countries outside the US, at least one of which must host a participating Overseas Research Center. Approximately nine awards of $12,000 each will be awarded. Funding is provided by the US Department of State's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs." <<link>>

ARTS AND HUMANITIES

American Academy of Religion
Collaborative Research Grants
Deadline: August 3, 2023
"Collaborative research grants are intended to stimulate cooperative research among scholars who have a focus on a clearly identified research project and for interdisciplinary work with scholars outside the field of religion. Collaborative project proposals are expected to describe plans for having the results of the research published. The grants can provide funds for networking and communication, and to support small research conferences only if they are designed primarily to advance research." <<link>>

National Endowment for the Humanities
Media Projects
Deadline: August 10, 2023
"The Media Projects program supports the development, production, and distribution of radio programs, podcasts, documentary films, and documentary film series that engage general audiences with humanities ideas in creative and appealing ways. Projects must be grounded in humanities scholarship and demonstrate an approach that is thoughtful, balanced, and analytical. Media Projects offers two levels of funding: Development and Production." <<link>>

Society of Architectural Historians
H. Allen Brooks Traveling Fellowship
Deadline: August 31, 2023
"The Society of Architectural Historians' prestigious H. Allen Brooks Travelling Fellowship will be offered for 2024 and will allow a recent graduate or emerging scholar to study by travel for a continuous period of three, six or twelve months. The goal of the fellowship is to provide an opportunity for a recent graduate with an advanced degree or an emerging scholar to:
- see and experience architecture and landscapes firsthand
- think about their profession deeply

•acquire knowledge useful for the recipient's future work, contribution to their profession, and contribution to society" <<link>>

American Musicological Society
AMS Subventions For Publications
Deadline: August 31, 2023
"Through funding provided by the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the Gladys Krieble Delmas Foundation, and the generous contributions of many individual donors, the Publications Committee of the American Musicological Society makes available funds to help with expenses involved in the publication of works of musical scholarship, including books, essay collections, articles, chapters in essay collections, special issues of journals, and works in non-print media. Subventions are granted for any topics of musicological research." <<link>>

Social Sciences

Brady Education Foundation
Grants
Deadline: August 1, 2023
"The Foundation is currently accepting Research Project (RP) proposals and Existing Program Evaluation (EPE) proposals that have the potential to provide data that will inform how to address disparities in educational opportunities associated with race, ethnicity, and family income." <<link>>

Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation
Distinguished Scholar Awards
Deadline: August 1, 2023
"The Foundation welcomes proposals from any of the natural and social sciences and aligned disciplines that promise to increase understanding of the causes, manifestations, and control of violence and aggression. Highest priority is given to research that addresses urgent, present-day problems of violence—what produces it, how it operates, and what prevents or reduces it."

National Science Foundation
Science of Learning and Augmented Intelligence
Deadline: August 2, 2023
"Science of Learning and Augmented Intelligence (SL) supports potentially transformative research that develops basic theoretical insights and fundamental knowledge about principles, processes and mechanisms of learning, and about augmented intelligence — how human cognitive function can be augmented through interactions with others or with technology, or through variations in context. The program supports research addressing learning in individuals and in groups, across a wide range of domains at one or more levels of analysis, including molecular and cellular mechanisms; brain systems; cognitive, affective and behavioral processes; and social and cultural influences." <<link>>

Russell Sage Foundation
Future of Work
Deadline: August 2, 2023
"The Russell Sage Foundation's program on the Future of Work supports innovative research on the causes and consequences of changes in the quality of jobs for low- and moderately paid workers and their families in the U.S. We seek investigator-initiated research proposals that will broaden our understanding of the role of changes in employer practices, the nature of the labor market and public policies on employment, earnings, and job quality. We are especially interested in proposals that address questions about the interplay of market and non-market forces in shaping the wellbeing of workers."

Russell Sage Foundation
Race, Ethnicity, and Immigration
Deadline: August 2, 2023
"The Russell Sage Foundation's program on Race, Ethnicity, and Immigration supports innovative investigator-initiated research that examines the roles of race, ethnicity, nativity, legal status —and their interactions with each other and other social categories—in the social, economic, and political outcomes for immigrants, U.S.-born racial and ethnic minorities, and native-born whites." <<link>>

Russell Sage Foundation
Immigration and Immigrant Integration
Deadline: August 2, 2023
"The Russell Sage Foundation/Carnegie Corporation of New York Initiative on Immigration and Immigrant Integration seeks to support innovative research on the effects of race, citizenship, legal status and politics, political culture, and public policy on outcomes for immigrants to the U.S. and for the U.S. -born of different racial and ethnic groups and generations. This initiative is part of RSF's Race, Ethnicity, and Immigration Program which invites proposals on a broader set of issues." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Innovative Technology Experiences for Students and Teachers
Deadline: August 11, 2023
"ITEST is an applied research and development program with goals to advance the equitable and inclusive integration of technology in the learning and teaching of science, technology, engineering, or mathematics (STEM) from pre-kindergarten through high school. The program's objective is to support all students' acquisition of the foundational preparation in STEM disciplines." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Cultural Anthropology Program Senior Research Awards
Deadline: August 15, 2023
"The primary objective of the Cultural Anthropology Program is to support fundamental, systematic anthropological research and training to increase understanding of the causes, consequences and complexities of human social and cultural variability.

The Cultural Anthropology Program welcomes proposals from researchers in all sub-fields of cultural anthropology and research at any temporal or spatial scale. Methodologies and approaches employed may include ethnographic field research, surveys, remote sensing, the collection of bio-markers, experimental research inside or outside of laboratory settings, archival research, the analysis of materials collections and extant data bases, mathematical and computational modeling and other research tools as appropriate for the proposed research." <<link>>

Accountable Institutions and Behavior
Deadline: August 15, 2023
"The Accountable Institutions and Behavior (AIB) Program supports basic scientific research that advances knowledge and understanding of issues broadly related to attitudes, behavior, and institutions connected to public policy and the provision of public services. Research proposals are expected to be theoretically motivated, conceptually precise, methodologically rigorous, and empirically oriented. Substantive areas include (but are not limited to) the study of individual and group decision-making, political institutions (appointed or elected), attitude and preference formation and expression, electoral processes and voting, public administration, and public policy." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Sociology
Deadline: August 15, 2023
"The Sociology Program supports basic research on all forms of human social organization — societies, institutions, groups and demography — and processes of individual and institutional change. The program encourages theoretically focused empirical investigations aimed at improving the explanation of fundamental social processes. This includes research on organizations and organizational behavior, population dynamics, social movements, social groups, labor force participation, stratification and mobility, family, social networks, socialization, gender, race and the sociology of science and technology." <<link>>

Sociological Initiatives Foundation
Grants
Deadline: August 16, 2023
"The Sociological Initiatives Foundation supports social change by linking research to social action. It funds research projects that investigate laws, policies, institutions, regulations, and normative practices that may limit equality in the U.S. It gives priority to projects that seek to address racism, xenophobia, classism, gender bias, exploitation, or the violation of human rights and freedoms. It also supports research that furthers language learning and behavior and its intersection with social and policy questions." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Decision, Risk and Management Sciences
Deadline: August 18, 2023
"The Decision, Risk and Management Sciences Program (DRMS) supports scientific research directed at increasing understanding and effectiveness of decision making by individuals, groups, organizations and society. DRMS supports research with solid foundations in theories and methods of the social and behavioral sciences. This social and behavioral science research should advance knowledge, address fundamental scientific and societal issues and have strong broader impacts." <<link>>

National Science Foundation
Economics
Deadline: August 18, 2023
"The Economics program supports research designed to improve the understanding of the processes and institutions of the U.S. economy and of the world system of which it is a part. This program also strengthens both empirical and theoretical economic analysis as well as the methods for rigorous research on economic behavior. It supports research in almost every area of economics, including econometrics, economic history, environmental economics, finance, industrial organization, international economics, labor economics, macroeconomics, mathematical economics, and public finance." <<link>>

Rita Allen Foundation
Scholars Program
Deadline: August 26, 2023
"The Rita Allen Foundation Scholars program funds basic biomedical research in the fields of cancer, immunology, and neuroscience, as well as pain through the Rita Allen Foundation Award in Pain." <<link>>

STEM
(Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics)

National Science Foundation
Opportunities for Promoting Understanding through Synthesis
Deadline: August 1, 2023
"The OPUS program is targeted to individuals, typically at later-career stages, who have contributed significant insights to a field or body of research over time. The program provides an opportunity to revisit and synthesize that prior research into a unique, integrated product(s) useful to the scientific community, now and in the future." <<link>>

American Psychological Foundation
Division 39 Fund for Psychoanalysis
Deadline: August 31, 2023
"Through the annual grants, Division 39 seeks to advance psychoanalysis by supporting new developments in education, research and service that demonstrate the value of psychoanalytic principles and treatments to the public. The 2023 preference will be given to applications that increase public awareness of the benefits of psychoanalytic principles and treatments." <<link>>

Engineering Information Foundation
Women in Engineering Program
Deadline: August 31, 2023
"The Foundation is interested in funding programs in the following areas:
1.Programs to Encourage Middle School Girls in Engineering

Deadline Reminders

2.Programs designed to improve the retention rate of undergraduate women in engineering." <<link>>

Elsa U. Pardee Foundation Grants

Deadline: August 31, 2023

"The Elsa U. Pardee Foundation funds research to investigators in United States non-profit institutions proposing research directed toward identifying new treatments or cures for cancer. The Foundation funds projects for a one-year period which will allow the establishment of capabilities of new cancer researchers or new cancer approaches by established cancer researchers. It is anticipated that this early-stage funding by the Foundation may lead to subsequent and expanded support using government agency funding. Project relevance to cancer detection, treatment, or cure should be clearly identified." <<link>>

Deadline Reminders

Below are grants that are, or are expected to be, due in the next six months. For a list of grant deadlines for the whole year, please see our Grants Calendar on the Barnard website.
